How can parents, teachers, community members, and even school children help ward off school massacres? A nationally known science and psychology journalist examines the counter-massacre strategy that the FBI now favors over its failed “school shooter profile” approach.

Murders Most Foul: And the School Shooters in Our Midst has been featured on WNYC’s “The Takeaway,” Fox News’s “Happening Now,” KPCC’s “Air Talk with Larry Mantle,” WAMC’s “51 Percent,” WPKN’s “A Miniature World,” and on PsychologyToday.com. Author Rebecca Coffey is a frequent contributor to Scientific American and Discover magazines. She is a broadcasting commentator on Vermont Public Radio and a blogger for Psychology Today. She is also an award-winning video documentarian and the author of the nonfiction book Unspeakable Truths and Happy Endings, which received an Outstanding Academic Book award from the American Library Association’s Choice magazine.

According to Murders Most Foul, the FBI’s new strategy to stave off school massacres takes advantage of a once overlooked factor common to most perpetrators. They don’t act impulsively. Indeed, they brood about weaponry and routes of attack for days, weeks, and sometimes months. During that adrenaline-filled time, most shooters become excited enough to “leak” their intentions to someone in a position to act. Sometimes the leaks are subtle; sometimes they’re blatant. Sometimes it’s to an authority figure like a teacher. Sometimes it’s to a friend on the playground. But anyone who hears a leak holds the key to school safety. In an anecdotal style and with a focus on what the FBI says average people can do to help, Murders Most Foul carefully examines the entire history of school massacres and parses long-simmering debates about bullies, gun laws, violent media, and zero tolerance policies. It also elucidates FBI guidelines for helping school counselors and law enforcement agencies parse the wheat from the chaff of links so that they don’t waste resources chasing idle comments that aren’t real threats.

“In prose compelling for its stark focus, Coffey avoids facile polemics and challenges us to reach our own conclusions I found MMF a rare insight into one of the most disturbing trends of our times.”—Raul Ramos y Sanchez, Author of America Libre and House Divided from Grand Central Publishing.

“MMF is clearly written, well-researched, unadorned reporting with thoughtful analysis. I highly recommend it.”—Jane Hammons, UC Berkeley.”
